LONDON CITY AIRPORT ANNOUNCE MANAGEMENT CHANGES

London City Airport announces the appointment of W M Lindsell as Airport director, with effect from 19 June 1988. This appointment follows the decision of John Douthwaite to accept the offer of a position with the international division of British Airports Services.

William (Bill) Lindsell has worked on the development of London City since its inception and is already a director of London City Airport Limited and director of Mowlem (Building) Ltd. His work on behalf of the Airport has made him a well known and popular figure with the commercial and development communities in Docklands as well as with the local community associations.

John Douthwaite comments on how much he has enjoyed a unique experience in airport management and leaves the Airport confident that it will go from strength to strength in the future.

Managing director of London City, Bill Charnock, says "John's departure is very much regretted and we all wish him well, but the appointment of Bill Lindsell means that our plans for the future at City Airport with our new senior management structure of Bruce Unsted, assistant director (operations) and newly appointed Don Kenny, assistant director (commercial), can continue to progress and develop. I am confident that the new team will prove to be a dynamic force in European aviation."
