WIRELESS INTERNET ACCESS TAKES OFF AT LONDON CITY AIRPORT

London City Airport is pleased to announce that they have joined forces with Megabeam - the first Pan-European wireless high speed Internet access provider.

Once the 'Wireless Internet Access' system is installed throughout the London City Airport terminal, our customer – the business traveller - will have remote access to their corporate networks, e-mail and the Internet whilst travelling through the airport.

Bernard Lavelle, General Manager Sales for London City Airport said, "The business traveller remains our key focus, our aim is to provide a service that reduces the time and stress associated with business travel. The wireless local area network (WLAN) provides an enhanced level of service for passengers who wish to access their e-mails or go on-line whilst on the move. Therefore by implementing a wireless communication network we are effectively maximising business productivity."

To access the subscription-based service, business travellers simply switch on their WLAN-enabled laptop or personal digital assistant (PDA). The computer or PDA automatically finds the Megabeam network, which provides on screen instructions, allowing you to be on-line within seconds.

"Developing our service to improve the efficiency of business travel, means that London City remains at the forefront of the industry. In today's business environment speed and time are critical factors in determining travel choice for the business traveller. Therefore by offering facilities such as Wireless Internet Access throughout the terminal, flying from London City Airport could not be made easier, making our airport the number one choice for business travel. However, we will continue to invest in upgrading our already excellent facilities, to make sure we continue to satisfy the needs of our customer – the business traveller." concludes Bernard.
